

YOUR JOURNEY TO COLLEGE

Interview Do's & Don'ts and College Interview Questions

Do

- Find out whether the college recommends that students come for an interview.
- Inquire as to whether the interview is informative or evaluative.
- See if an alumni representative in your area can grant an interview if you cannot travel to the school.
- Arrive 10 minutes early and dress the part. Know where the interview will be held and dress on the conservative side.
- Demonstrate what you will bring to the campus community through examples.
- Reveal who you really are. Admissions officers want to get to know you as a person, not a set of statistics.
- Highlight your passions and interests – discuss why your accomplishments were meaningful and what you got out of them.
- Review a list of frequently asked questions and think through the issues ahead of time.
- Review your application materials before you go. They may reference something that you wrote – make sure it is fresh in your mind.
- Be true to yourself, who you really are and what you believe in.
- Ask the interviewer about their experiences at the college.

Don't

- Show up unannounced and expect an interview.
- Be too early.
- Sound like you have rehearsed a speech. The interview should be like a conversation. Be natural, be yourself and be optimistic.
- Be afraid to show your sense of humor.

- Show up with no knowledge of the school and its programs.
- Come unprepared without questions & impressions about the college.
- Forget to get the name and title of the person interviewing you and follow-up with a well-written thank you note, not an email.
- Tell the interviewer why the college will be lucky to have a brilliant student, such as you.
- Overdo the makeup, cologne, or jewelry and don't chew gum.
- Answer questions with just a yes or no. Try to keep your answers as conversational as possible.
- Focus on your negatives. Remember that problems can be viewed as challenges – demonstrate how you overcame adversity if necessary.
- Ask general questions that can be found in the school brochure or on the website.
